

Abstract of Disclosure

A method for managing the transmission of messages over a backbone network in which the users are segmented relative to expected quality of service level. The access of the lesser service level users to the backbone network is then restricted, when necessary, to assure high quality of service for the other service level users. The other service customers are charged at a higher rate that reflects the better quality of service being provided to them.